Meetings, survey offer a chance for public input

Budget meetings are scheduled around the Ann Arbor community this month, where members of the public will be asked to consider proposed budget cuts and offer their own suggestions.

A survey also has been put on the district’s Web page asking for similar feedback as the district aims to cut $20 million from for the 2010-11 fiscal budget that begins July 1, 2010.

Officials are working on proposed budget reductions and must adopt a balanced district budget by the end of June.

During the two-hour budget sessions, participants will break into discussion groups to consider options and discuss other suggestions. Meetings are scheduled to begin at 6:30 p.m.:
- Thursday, Jan. 7 – Huron High School cafeteria, 2727 Fuller Road.
- Tuesday, Jan. 12 – Skyline High School commons, 2552 N. Maple Road.
- Thursday, Jan. 14 – Scarlett Middle School cafeteria, 3300 Lorraine St.
- Tuesday, Jan. 19 – Pioneer High School cafeteria, 601 W. Stadium Blvd.

For updates on the budget process and background information visit online: http://a2schools.org and click on the blue “District Budget” box on the right side of the page.

Included on the page is up-to-date budget and financial information as well as the survey which asks for input on the budget process and solicits ideas and suggestions on how to reduce school operation costs. Also on the site is a “User Friendly Guide to the Budget” as a reference.

Volunteers lend a hand in classrooms and other areas around district

Volunteers are important to The Ann Arbor Public Schools and each one is as unique as the life experience they bring to the district.

Some are retirees who have time to devote, others are parents who want to spend time in their children’s learning environment and still others are residents who simply enjoy the classroom.

Take Simona Cucuiet, volunteering for the second year at Huron High School’s media center. Cucuiet is a former high school teacher and economist from Romania who last year spent 240 hours volunteering.

Simona Cucuiet, below, a volunteer at Huron High School’s media center, often works at the front circulation desk where she assists students and staff. This is Cucuiet’s second year volunteering; she also substitute teaches at the high school. The Romanian native moved to the Ann Arbor area with her husband.

Lois Zimmerman, above, volunteers her time at the Dickinson Elementary School kindergarten classroom of Sally Steward, where Zimmerman has spent time for the past four years. The retired elementary school teacher says she enjoys working one-on-one with young students helping them with their lessons. She also volunteers around the community as a clown.
Student delegates embrace culture and customs of Japan

From AAPSNews Service

Octopus sushi, a visit to the Hiroshima Peace Memorial and sleeping on futons were all part of a student cultural experience in Hikone, Japan this fall.

Chinonye Uche, a Slauson Middle School student, shared her experience communicating with her host family. “It was hard talking to them in Japanese,” she said. “They tried to speak English to accommodate me. We used a computer to translate.”

Aviva Gordon from Clague Middle School said her family had a translator and that her host mom was an English teacher, which helped. “I loved all the food,” she added. “But the most powerful day was the day we went to Hiroshima” where the students were immersed in the country’s history of World War II, she said. When the group left to return to the United States, the eighth-grader said, “I didn’t feel like I was coming home, I felt like I was leaving home.”

According to project coordinator Larry Dishman, the role of the delegates is to bring good will to the people of Hikone, as the two communities celebrated the 40th anniversary of the sister city relationship.

“This is something you will remember for many, many years, if not for a lifetime,” Dishman told students who reported back on their experiences and shared their favorite (and not-so-favorite) times from the trip at a debriefing and potluck dinner in December.

Anne Marie Borders, a Logan Elementary School teacher, was one of two project directors, a task she shared with Tonya Dildy, a teacher at Angell Elementary School. Both traveled to Japan on prior trips. Borders did a Web page for students where photos of the trip were posted along with their memories.

She agreed the Hiroshima Peace Memorial Museum was the most memorable part of the trip. “Hiroshima was hard,” she said. “It was hard for all of us. The only thing standing (within two kilometers from the blast) is that dome from one building.”

Some 239 students have traveled to Japan with the exchange over the years, Dishman said. “These groups of kids are from different middle schools and form a group unto themselves,” he said. “It kind of brings Ann Arbor together.”

Dishman has been the Hikone program coordinator since 1996 but has worked with the program in various capacities since 1990. He has served as coordinator for 10 of the program’s 13 trips. “It’s sort of a labor of love,” he said. “This changes kids’ lives, this program. They all remember this experience. It’s nice to touch a kid’s life in such a fashion. We should find ways to do it more often.”

Eighth- and ninth-grade students visit Hikone every other year; this year’s trip was special to celebrate the sister city anniversary.

Dishman said students must have a minimum 3.0 grade point average and their family must be willing to pay a user fee for the student to travel. Each student ambassador was required to raise $600 for this special delegation trip.

Ann Arbor middle school students will begin receiving information about the next Hikone exchange trip in early February at school, Dishman said. After signing up, students spend the summer prior to travel becoming immersed in Japanese culture and language preparing for the fall trip.

This year’s Ann Arbor delegation spent one week in Hikone with Japanese host families where they attended local junior high schools. They then visited Hiroshima, Miyajima and Kyoto and delivered 1,000 handmade origami paper cranes to the statue of Sadako in the Hiroshima Peace Park.

In October, a delegation of 14 junior high school students from Hikone visited Ann Arbor. It was the 31st time the Japanese city sent a delegation to Ann Arbor.

Ann Arbor’s Hikone Exchange coordinator encourages a worldly view

The adage that “life happens while you are making plans” could best explain Larry Dishman’s career path.

In pursuing multiple college degrees in linguistics and working toward a goal of teaching, he took a job working as an umpire for The Ann Arbor Public Schools Recreation Department. That led to a part-time job and, eventually, a full-time career coordinating team sports for the district’s Rec & Ed Department which he said has “helped me to touch a lot of lives. I’m glad I ended up here,” said Dishman who has been in his post since 1974.

Contacts through his job helped him arrange a series of exhibition games in Michigan for the NSK Global-sponsored Japanese Women’s National Championship fast-pitch softball team in the 1980s. He was also one of the architects and chief programmers for the Arborough Games, an exchange program with Peterborough, Ontario, Canada and was part of a German internship exchange with Ann Arbor’s German sister city.

Those, in turn, led him to become involved with the Hikone-Ann Arbor Educational Exchange Program which helps middle school students visit Japan and also arranges host families when Japanese student delegations visit Ann Arbor.

Dishman now coordinates this exchange program in the Ann Arbor district that has sent dozens of young Ann Arbor students to Japan. Through the program, he has been able to encourage a love of Japanese culture and language.

“I’ve tried to expand their knowledge of world languages,” he said. “The idea is to let them

Sing out: 44 earn spot in state honors choir

From AAPSNews Service

Forty-four Ann Arbor secondary students have qualified to participate in the Michigan Student Vocal Music Association Junior High/Middle School State Honors Choir and will perform on Jan. 23 in Grand Rapids as part of the three-day Michigan Music Conference.

According to Cherry Westerman, choir teacher at Slauson Middle School, this is the largest group from Ann Arbor in 25 years to participate in this state honor.

“It’s a big deal,” said Westerman. “This is just ecstatically wonderful and bigger than usual. A lot of this is because we have a really strong music program here. It’s exciting for our kids.”

In addition, 60 singers (including those qualifying for state-level honors choir) participated in the MSVMA Regional Honors Choir. This also was the largest number of singers from Ann Arbor to participate in many years, Westerman said.

The MSVMA sponsors an honors choir program at both the junior high/middle school and high school levels. Students in the JH/MS honors choirs sing in combination ensembles of soprano, alto, tenor and bass with just one on a part for the audition.

Westerman said student singers learn a lot by participating in honors choirs. They are humbled by others who are better, they find out “they also know quite a lot and can be leaders,” she said. They also learn to work with other students and different music directors with other approaches and they get to perform high-quality musical selections in a professional venue. “They are singing for a number of other music teachers – a critical audience,” she added.

All students selected must be able to clear their schedule to participate in rehearsals and be able to pay the fees to participate, although most schools host fundraisers to help pay for students who cannot afford it, Westerman said.

According to information from the district, students scheduled to participate in the Jan. 23 MSVMA JH/MS State Honors Choir performance include:

Clague Middle School: Noha Beleh, Emily Dodge and Maddi Shrinivasan.

Forsythe Middle School: Heather Duval, Abbey Johnson, Olivia Lamson, Olivia Merritt, Sorbie Richner and Jamie Seely.

Pioneer High School: Iman Aslani, Tre Brown, Kelsey Detering, William Kryska III, Caitlin Mangan, Jenny Nathans, Maddie Polovick, Eli Rhodenisher, Rebecca Shiban, Mark Strader, Karina Stribiley and Lukas Trierweiler.

Scarlett Middle School: Javairia Johnson and Prestine Spratt.

Slauson Middle School: Joe Babenece, Adriana Ellis, Cedric Gin, Josh King, Livia Luan, Maks Muno, Jake Norton, Chelsea Racelis, Maris Reid, Elise Reichard, Parker Sanford, Michelle Trent, Daniel Wu and Kenny Xue.

Skyline High School: Tasfia Bari, Alex Fuchs, Noha Lehker, Van Theros, Mitch Tolly, Sina Webster and Rachel Xydis.

In addition, Ann Arbor will be represented by the Huron High School Bel Canto, a selected women’s choir directed by Bonnie Kidd; Ken Westerman, Pioneer High School choir director will present a session to other state music teachers; and other students from middle and high schools who were selected for the State Honors Middle School Band and Orchestra; and the State High Schools Honors Choirs.

know that everything isn’t as it is in Ann Arbor, Michigan. It makes them better global thinkers. As a rule, many of them have never been out of the (United) States.”

Dishman’s parents moved to Ann Arbor from Nebraska (“They chose to go east, instead of west during the ‘Dirty Thirties,’” he said,) and Dishman was born and raised here, attending St. Thomas the Apostle School. He is married to Donna and they have two adult daughters.

In addition to his dedication to the Hikone exchange program, Dishman is a Civil War history buff, likes 1930s and 1940s films, and enjoys the early history of college football (pre 1950.) He also loves Irish culture and music.

Larry Dishman

Occupation: Coordinator for Team Sports for the Ann Arbor Public Schools Rec & Ed Department and coordinator for the Hikone-Ann Arbor Educational Exchange Program since 1996.

Residence: Ann Arbor native who lives in Canton Township but maintains strong connections here.

Education: Undergraduate degree in English and French from Eastern Michigan University, two master’s degrees in linguistics from the University of Michigan and a nearly completed doctoral degree in linguistics.

Age: 62.

Family: Married to Donna. They have two adult daughters, Megan, 26, and Bethany, 22.

Community service: His work with the Hikone exchange program.

Favorite meals: Yosenabe (a seafood stew) at Izakaya Sanpei, a Japanese restaurant in Canton Township, or ribs and kraut at Three Brothers Restaurant in Plymouth.

Favorite book: “All Quiet on the Western Front” by Erich Maria Remarque.

Life philosophy: “If you don’t create a building or edifice, leave a mark in the hearts of people you touch. Leave the world a better place because of what you did while you were here.”

at Huron after she and her husband, Peter, arrived to live in the area.

This year, Cucuiet’s volunteer time is more limited, as she has begun substitute teaching at Huron. Still, she spends between one to two days each week volunteering. She also is working to get her teaching certification and is considering going to college for a master’s degree, perhaps in library science.

“I’ve improved my English,” she said of her time volunteering in the building. “I’ve become a sub. I feel like I’m home here. I feel like part of the family.”

Lauren Hallinan Warren, school librarian and media specialist at Huron, said Cucuiet’s time in the school has impacted her, the library staff and students. “She was perfect for us, a good fit,” Warren said. “She’s integrated herself well – she’s become part of the team. I can rely on her. We got better than we expected.”

Warren said Cucuiet has worked the front circulation counter, shelved books and has even helped make some of the Romanian students feel comfortable as they use the media center.

At Dicken Elementary School, Lois Zimmerman is in her fourth year volunteering in the classroom. She put in 184 hours of volunteer service last year and this year spends one day a week helping out in Sally Steward’s kindergarten room.

The retired kindergarten teacher tutored at Washtenaw Community College for a year when she moved to the area four years ago. But the elementary school setting appealed more to her. “I knew that I belonged with children,” she said. She assists one-on-one with students who need help with everything from writing to math.

“My effort is helping the children that don’t have the basic concepts,” she said. “It helps the teacher, it helps the children and it gives me something to do that I know I do well.”

In addition to her time at Dicken, Zimmerman also volunteers in the Ann Arbor area as a clown where she does magic tricks as “Firefly the Clown.” Firefly visits Dicken kindergarteners each year as a treat, but Zimmerman said she is realistic with students about it all. “They always recognize my voice,” she said. “And I tell them there’s no such thing as magic. It’s just something they don’t understand.”

Zimmerman has four children, seven grandchildren and seven great-grandchildren. She enjoys reading, outdoor activities, is a member of the AAUW and is involved with her co-housing community in Scio Township.

She said volunteering is something people should consider if they feel the desire. “I wouldn’t put a ‘should’ to it,” she said. “If they love children and want to help, it’s a good way to do it.”

Steward called Zimmerman “phenomenal” in her approach. “She brings with her the background in education,” Steward said. “She is the warm, fuzzy grandma personality that the children can relate to.”

The Ann Arbor district has centrally screened and coordinated its volunteers since 2005.

Norma McCuiston, coordinator for partnerships and projects, said the district asks for a commitment of 16 weeks with a minimum of two hours each week.

McCuiston said volunteers add diversity and an economic value. “If they weren’t volunteers, look at how much we’d have to pay,” she added.
